Health and wellness or prevention information

Be a Part of a Healthy Start

Texas Health Steps visits give you a chance to partner with your child's doctor to talk about their physical growth, behavior and emotional progress. Newborns should have at least six Texas Health Steps visits by 15 months. Once the six visits are complete, the newborn can qualify for a $75 gift card. Adolescents ages 12 to 21 can earn a $25 gift card for getting a yearly Texas Health Steps exam from their Primary Care Physician (PCP) or OB/Gyn.

These visits allow you to talk to your child's doctor about how to teach healthy habits. Before you go to your child's appointment, write down questions that you have about your child's health to help you remember what you would like to ask the doctor. Your doctor wants you to ask questions so you have the information you need to make decisions about your child's health.

Questions to ask your child's doctor

- Which types of regular exercise is good for my child's age to keep a healthy weight and lower stress?
- Which foods make up a healthy diet for my child? NOTE: Weight gain can also be a sign of depression. If your child has had any signs of anxiety, depression or other behavioral problems, ask your doctor about treatment options.
- What is the best way to take care of my child's teeth and when should my child see a dentist?
- When should my child have a follow-up visit or next Texas Health Steps exam?
- Does your doctor's office offer telehealth visits by phone or web meeting?

Preventive health visits are the best way to keep your child healthy. All children up to the age of 21 should have a Texas Health Steps exam once a year. If you have problems scheduling a Texas Health Steps visit, call Member Outreach for help with getting an appointment.

Healthy Habits for Children with Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder (ADHD)

Follow these tips to help lessen your child's ADHD or stop it from worsening:

- Eat whole, healthy food; mostly plants and meat, and dairy. Poor eating habits can make focusing hard.
- Drink water rather than dairy or soda products. Fluid loss can change how a person focuses and thinks.
- Get enough sleep – nine to 12 hours a night for children who are between six and 12 years old. Lack of sleep may change the body's strength and mood.
- Stay active. Getting an hour of mild exercise for most days of the week can help strength and mood.
- Limit TV and screen activities. Support physical activities for children with movement issues or life-long health problems.
- Practice serve and return parenting to stay linked to your child. Part of how a child self-rules is by using a serve and return process which is back and forth interactions between a child and parent or caregiver.
- Keep daily routines, order, structure and a living space that limits distraction. This helps a child learn how to self-rule.

How to Raise Your Credit Score

Whether you're building your credit from scratch or rebuilding after your scores have taken a hit, it may not be easy to know where to start. Once you learn how you get your scores and the basic ways to help them, then you can dive into more detailed guides based on your situation.

Steps to raise your credit scores

The steps that can help you raise your credit score will depend on your own credit situation. But there are also basic steps that can help almost anyone's credit.

Here are a few basic steps you can take to help raise your credit score:

- Open accounts that report to the credit bureaus
- Keep your credit balances low
- Pay your bills on time

You can also try to boost your credit score by using Experian Boost^{TM†}, a free service that gives you credit for paying bills like your cell phone, utilities and streaming services on time.

Build your credit file

Opening new accounts that will be reported to the major credit bureaus is the first step in building your credit file. You can't start laying down a good track record as a borrower until there are accounts in your name, so having at least some open and active credit accounts can be helpful.

These could include credit-builder loans or secured cards if you're starting out or have a low score—or a great rewards credit card with no yearly fee if you're trying to raise a score. Getting added as an approved user on someone else's credit card can also help, assuming they use the card responsibly.

Don't miss payments

Your payment history is vital in determining your credit scores and having a long history of on-time payments can help you reach great credit scores. To do this, you'll need to make sure you don't miss loan or credit card payments by more than 29 days—payments that are at least 30 days late can be reported to the credit bureaus and hurt your credit scores.

Setting up automatic payments for the least amount due can help you not miss a payment (as long as you're careful not to overdraw your bank account). If you're having trouble affording a bill, reach out to your credit card issuer right away to talk about hardship options.

Staying on top of accounts that don't often appear on your credit reports (gym memberships and subscription services, for instance) can also help. The on-time payments might not help your credit, but the account being sent to collections could still cause your scores to dip.

Catch up on past-due accounts

If you're behind on your bills, bringing them up to date could help. While a late payment can stay on your credit report for up to seven years, having all your accounts up to date can be good for your scores. Also, it stops further late payments from being added to your credit history as well as extra late fees.

For those having trouble with credit card debt, talking to a credit counselor and getting on a debt management plan (DMP) could be helpful. The counselor may be able to arrange lower payments and interest rates, and get card issuers to bring your accounts up to date.

Pay down revolving account balances

Even if you're not behind on your bills, having a high balance on revolving credit accounts can lead to a high credit usage rate and hurt your scores. Revolving accounts include credit cards and lines of credit, and keeping a low balance on them relative to their credit limits can help you raise your scores. Those with the highest credit scores tend to keep their credit utilization ratio in the low single digits.

Limit how often you apply for new accounts

While you may need to open accounts to build your credit file, you'll want to limit how often you send credit applications. Each application can lead to a hard inquiry, which may hurt your scores a little, but inquiries can add up and have a compounding effect on your credit scores. Opening a new account will also lower your average age of accounts, and that could also hurt your scores.

Inquiries and the average age of your accounts are minor scoring factors, but you still want to be careful about how many applications you send. One special case is when you're rate shopping for certain types of loans, such as an auto loan or mortgage. Credit scoring models may ignore some inquiries if they happen within the span of a couple of weeks.

Your Coronavirus (COVID-19) Questions Answered

The CDC recommends that everyone 12 years and older get a COVID-19 vaccination to help protect against COVID-19.

In the face of COVID-19, every question, answer and vaccination is important. That's why we're sharing information to answer concerns you may have about your child getting an approved COVID-19 vaccine. Using facts from the CDC, we hope to answer your questions and arm you with the knowledge you and your children deserve so you can feel comfortable with your decision.

Visit Blue Cross and Blue Shield Coronavirus (COVID-19) Updates at www.bcbs.com/medicaid/coronavirus-information for more COVID-19 coverage and benefit information.

Q&A: The COVID-19 vaccine for pre-teens and teens

Why shouldn't I wait until there is more data to get my child vaccinated? While children are less likely to develop severe illness from COVID-19, they are still at risk of contracting COVID-19 without showing symptoms; some have developed serious complications and death. There are also growing concerns about the long-term effects of the COVID-19 viral infection (Multisystem Inflammatory Syndrome in Children, MIS-C) for some children who get COVID. It is important to know that children without symptoms can have and spread the virus without meaning to, including to children under 12 who do not yet have a vaccine available.

How does the COVID vaccine work? The approved Pfizer-BioNTech vaccine is a messenger RNA(mRNA) vaccine; it contains a bit of RNA (ribonucleic acid) that teaches the cells of the body how to make a protein that causes the immune system to make COVID-19 antibodies that protect us from the disease. This means the vaccine helps our bodies remember how to fight the virus if we're infected in the future.

If my child already had COVID, should they still get the vaccine? Yes. Health experts recommend the COVID-19 vaccine even for people who have had a COVID-19 infection. Although infection likely provides some immunity to reinfection, we don't know yet how long natural immunity lasts. So, it's important to still get vaccinated even if they've had COVID-19 to protect themselves and others.

Where can my child get vaccinated? The vaccine is available at many locations, including some pediatricians' offices. Vaccines are also offered at some pharmacies and school-based clinics. Check your local health department websites or with your pediatrician for details.

Do I need to make my child an appointment? Some offices may require appointments, while others will offer shots on a walk-in basis. Check your local health department websites or with your pediatrician for details.

For more information about COVID-19 topics and how the pandemic can affect you and your family, visit www.cdc.gov/COVID19. You can also contact your pediatrician's office or your local health department for additional COVID-19 vaccine information.

The Food and Drug Administration (FDA) requires that vaccine recipients or their caregivers are provided with Emergency Use Authorization (EUA) fact sheets to help make informed decisions about vaccination. The EUA fact sheet is specific to each authorized COVID-19 vaccine, is developed by the manufacturer of the vaccine, and is authorized by the FDA. Links to the fact sheet documents are available at www.CDC.gov.

Spring Activities

Chalk Scenes

Draw scenes with chalk on the ground like a kitchen table and chairs or a tulip garden and take pictures from above to make it look like the kids are interacting within the scenes. Incorporate real toys into the pictures like a scooter on the tulip path. For example, lay the scooter on its side and have the child lay on their side like they would be riding the scooter.

Paper Drawings

Draw scenes with markers, colored pencils, crayons, onto large paper like a kitchen table and chairs or a tulip garden and take pictures from above to make it look like the kids are interacting within the scenes. Incorporate real items into the pictures like a water can being used to tend to the tulips. For example, have the child lay on their side like they would be standing and hold the watering can over the tulips.

Indoor Quiet Space

Create a space inside in a quiet area of the house. Fill it with cushions and blankets to make it cozy. Drape a blanket over the area to create a private space. Add quiet time activities to the space like puzzles, books and coloring items. Incorporate a radio and play music to add an auditory element to the space!
